SAN JOSE, Calif. -- How can you tell if that special someone is really single? Online dating service True.com is offering a way to make sure your suitor isn't married.

True founder Herb Vest said the company searches public records to determine whether its members are actually single.

Subscribers to the dating service are also screened for criminal records.

Vest said he wants to provide a wholesome environment for courtship.

There are other options for those looking for a little action on the side -- even if it's just on the computer screen. Many sites offer chat groups for people who are "married and flirting."
